

A Family Commitment To Excellence

Perley-Halladay's insulated panel construction creates a clean, thermally efficient building.

In 1969, Wayne A. Marcho left a career in electronics and purchased his first calf at a local livestock sale. In the 29 years that followed, he and his family have seen Marcho Farms grow from a 2-person veal farm, to an integrated operation processing over 1,600 head per week.

"The lessons I learned in that time, combined with our adherence to strong ethical principles, provided the vision for the future of Marcho Farms"

Wayne A. Marcho

Put Perley-Halladay's team of design/build professionals to work on your next project.

The Integrated Approach

Marcho Farms raises and supervises 100% of the calves they process. Each step in their integrated approach, including selection, housing, feeding, transportation, inspection, slaughter, processing and delivery, is undertaken with a sense of pride, and an unswerving commitment to quality. The benefit to buyers, restaurant professionals, and consumers is veal of extraordinary quality and consistency.

A Matter of Pride

"Pride is a commodity in the veal industry," says Wayne Marcho, "and nowhere is that more evident than at our production plant. To look inside this plant is to witness modern technology, and an almost fanatical commitment to sanitation, and skilled workers whose single-minded devotion to quality is reflected in stainless steel and polished tile."

Relationship Built on Trust

In 1988, Marcho Farms first approached Perley-Halladay with its needs for a processing facility, trusting in their industry-leading experience in cold storage and controlled environment construction. Since then, numerous expansions and renovations have forged a strong working relationship that made Perley-Halladay the logical choice when it came time for their most recent endeavor. By applying the same high-quality design methods and construction techniques honed over 40 years of cold storage installations, Perley-Halladay constructed Marcho Farms' new, state-of-the-art milk replacer production facility.

"Formula fed calves are raised on milk replacer formula, and Marcho Farms' calves are fed only our own Select Formula milk replacer produced at this plant."

Wayne A. Marcho

A pre-engineered metal building wrapped in a thermally efficient skin of modular, pre-fabricated insulated panels provided just the combination of economy and thermal efficiency that Marcho Farms was looking for.

